LinkedIn Marketing Material, Compliance Submission

LinkedIn Content and Ads Month 1 Compliance Submission

12 organic posts, posting schedule, and ad copy for all 4 segments

Date: September 22, 2026

What's in This Submission

This package bundles a month of LinkedIn organic content with the ad copy for all four transition segments, submitted together so the whole month can run without a mid-month compliance gap.

1. Organic posts, 12 posts

Three per week for four weeks (Monday/Wednesday/Friday), rotating through transition education, a five-part Checkpoint Strategy explainer series, personal story, and fiduciary/practice differentiator content. Each post is shown as it will actually render in-feed, image and layout included, with its disclosure line and hashtags exactly as they'll be published.

2. LinkedIn ad copy, 4 segments, 6 ads

Two variants each for Job Loss & Layoff and Early Retirement, one variant each for Divorce and Inheritance. Each ad is shown as a full creative mockup, image, headline, description, and CTA, as it will appear in the LinkedIn feed. Job Loss is the only segment launching immediately (Phase 1 of the budget and testing plan); the other three are included now so a later phase does not require a second compliance round-trip.

Not included in this submission

Facebook/Instagram ad copy (separate platform, not part of the current push) and email nurture sequences (follow-up is being handled manually for now).

The Checkpoint Strategy has five phases. Over the next few weeks I'll walk through each one, starting here.

Phase 1: Where We Begin.

Before any plan gets built, there's a conversation. Not a sales pitch, not a form to fill out, just 45 minutes to understand what's actually changing in your life and what feels most uncertain about it.

This is where every client relationship starts, and it's complimentary regardless of what happens after. Sometimes that conversation confirms we're a good fit. Sometimes it doesn't, and I'll tell you that too.

Clarity has to come before a plan means anything. That's the whole point of starting here.

If you've just been laid off, here's the order that actually matters in the first 30 days.

Confirm your severance details, how it's paid and whether it affects unemployment eligibility. Understand your benefits deadlines, especially health coverage; COBRA elections typically have a 60-day window, not a 60-day requirement to decide immediately.

Then stop. Nothing about your 401(k), a major purchase, or a big financial decision needs to happen this week.

The goal of the first month isn't a plan. It's stability. The plan comes after.

"Fiduciary" gets used a lot in this industry. Here's what it actually means in practice.

It means I'm legally required to act in your best interest, not the firm's, not a product manufacturer's, and not my own. Every recommendation has to clear that bar.

It means no sales quotas and no proprietary products I'm incentivized to push. When insurance or annuity products do carry a commission, that's disclosed to you in writing before any recommendation, not buried in paperwork afterward.

It's not a marketing word here. It's a legal standard, and it's the one I'm held to on every client relationship.

Continuing the series: The Checkpoint Strategy's second phase.

Phase 2: Identify and Protect.

Before building toward the future, we stabilize the present. That means reviewing benefits continuation, checking for insurance gaps, and confirming cash flow can hold steady through the transition.

This is the phase most people want to skip past, they want the plan, the strategy, the exciting part. But a plan built on an unstable foundation doesn't hold up. Protecting what you already have comes before growing it.

Claiming Social Security at 62 instead of your full retirement age can permanently reduce your monthly benefit by roughly 25 to 30 percent. Waiting until 70 increases it.

I see the same mistake often: claiming early simply because retirement started early, without ever running the numbers on the alternative.

Retiring earlier than planned doesn't mean you have to claim earlier than planned. Those are two separate decisions, and modeling them side by side, based on your actual numbers, usually changes the answer.

A question I get asked often: what does competitive mountain biking have to do with financial planning?

More than you'd think. I'm a state champion mountain bike racer and a national champion in 24-hour endurance racing. Training for those races never came down to one big effort. It came down to breaking an enormous challenge into checkpoints, and adjusting to real conditions along the way, weather, terrain, how my body actually felt that day versus the plan on paper.

Financial transitions follow the same pattern. Progress happens through checkpoints, pacing, and smart decisions made under real circumstances, not the ones you wish you had.

That's where the name, and the whole approach, comes from.

Phase 3: Plot Checkpoints.

This is where the actual plan gets built, with milestones set at 30, 90, and 180 days rather than one distant, abstract goal.

Shorter checkpoints do two things a single long-term goal can't. They make progress visible sooner, and they create natural points to adjust when real life doesn't match the projection, which it usually doesn't, at least not exactly.

Coordination with your CPA or attorney happens here too, when the situation calls for it, so the plan reflects your whole financial picture, not just the parts that touch investments.

A settlement's headline number and its real value are not the same thing.

A dollar in a Roth IRA, a dollar in a traditional 401(k), and a dollar of home equity carry different tax treatment and different liquidity.

Two settlements with the same total can leave two very different financial pictures once that's accounted for.

Before agreeing to a proposed split, it's worth understanding the real, after-tax value of what's actually on the table, not just the total at the bottom of the page.

Closing out the series with the final two phases.

Phase 4: Implement. This is where recommendations become action, account rollovers, portfolio construction, document updates, and referrals to specialists when the situation calls for it.

Phase 5: Track and Reset. Life doesn't hold still after a plan is built. Ongoing reviews and recalibration keep the plan aligned as circumstances, goals, and the market change.

Five phases, one process, the same structure whether the transition is a layoff, a divorce, an inheritance, or an early retirement. The specifics change. The framework doesn't.

Inherited stocks, funds, or real estate typically receive a "step-up" in cost basis to their value on the date of death.

That single detail can significantly reduce, or eliminate, capital gains tax if you sell. It's also one of the easiest things to lose track of if records aren't documented early.

Almost nothing about an inheritance needs to be decided quickly. This is one of the few things actually worth confirming and documenting sooner rather than later.

One checkpoint at a time. That's been the thread through everything I've posted this month, the strategy, the story behind it, and the specific decisions that come with a layoff, an early retirement, a divorce, or an inheritance.

None of these moments come with a manual. What they need is a structured process and someone who works only for you while you're in the middle of it.
